

A taste of Paradise

Return

Occasionally
when intellection
loosens its grip
I return
and realise the pain of separation.

My consort takes me to an altar
and winds a rhythm
around my brain.

A song sounds and echoes, it brings the sea laden with wetness
and signals trees to cymbalize their leaves

Like a (mating) bird of paradise
I quiver and swirl;
but prior to release
time intrudes bearing word chains and symbols

that finitize mind back to the unsures of men.
