

Bush's Xmas Tantrum

Bush is furious that patriots, who continue to hold the values and laws of the USA inviolate, leaked the story of illegal bugging and surveillance to the media. The American Fuhrer's indignation equals that of his historical Nazi counterpart. How dare someone expose the 'commander in chief' for the criminal that he really is!

Congress has also finally realised that the 'Patriot Act' subverts the very principles upon which the USA was founded; Bush, in his dissociative madness, is furious at Congress for not granting an automatic extension, it is clear he no longer appreciates the role of Government.

Bush's antics and dissociation would be amusing if not for the casualties of war. The Bush administration is without doubt the most destructive government the USA has ever known. No other administration has done more to subvert American values (in every conceivable way) and harm America's international reputation than the Bush regime. The Fuhrer is now demonstrably mad - perhaps this is a subterfuge to avoid the responsibility of the inevitable criminal charges that face him. His crimes against humanity and the nation are not easily ignored.

The modern world is a very small place and any nation that fails to constructively engage its neighbours is at a disadvantage. Antiquated conservative beliefs of elitism, divisionism, racism and imposition based on force or blackmail (military or economic) are no longer tolerated. Any nation that displays a brutish unilateral attitude meets with immediate international disapproval. The last attempt at empire building (military or economic) ended with the twentieth century; notwithstanding some vestiges of the past remain today as anachronisms (Bilderberg Group).

In a world of limited resources we are faced with fighting each other or cooperation. Developing constructive strategies for the future is the only viable option. Conflict is not an option, an irradiated or polluted earth will not be able to support mammalian life. However, this logic is lost on Bush and his handlers; all fanatics subscribe to insane fantasies, one of many is that divine intervention will cure everything from cretinism to constipation. Ultra-right regimes are noted for their delusive ideologies, the historical reality is that they all pursue annihilation. The reader should have no difficulty identifying extremist groups and governments in today's world.

Capitalism (wealth for the few) is anathema; it degrades every aspect of community relations and corrupts the human spirit; it will go the same way as communism. Someone's profit is another's loss; the word "profit" is an obscenity. If there is to be conflict it will not be based on symbols or metaphors (flags, nationalism, ideologies, etc) it will arise from disparity and inequity, those who 'have not' against those who 'have'. Inequity knows no tribal or national allegiances, it is a simple matter of need and fair distribution.

It is astounding that Bush (and his neo-cons) have not been arrested to date - their offences are unambiguous and clearly evident. Any leader of a democratic nation that places himself above the law clearly needs to be removed; Bush openly mocks the Constitution of the United States through his actions. The people need only return to the nation's founding principles to effect the first stage of rehabilitation. Failure to deal decisively with Bush and his neo-cons will not remove the cancer from American society or demonstrate to the world that America is ready to once again join the international community in a spirit of cooperation. Bush and his neo-cons must answer for their many crimes – no one is immune from prosecution!

It is the people who effect change. Redeem the nation – walk on Washington!

Peace.
