

Corruption and Decline

Bush is not very good at anything, with that fact the world is fully acquainted, however, even the lowliest morons are usually good liars but recent video evidence has proven that Bush is not even skilled in the lowly art of lying. All doubts regarding Bush's prior knowledge of the magnitude and destructive impact expected of Katrina have been dispelled by the release of video evidence clearly portraying Bush in full knowledge of the then pending emergency. We leave the pathological problem of Bush and the lying neo-cons in the incapable hands of the American people; the Bush regime is internationally known as the most deceitful and tawdry in American history. Good luck doodles, China and Russia could not hope for better!

Dumbya Bush

A deficient character has less resistance to ignoble thought and behaviour; faced with the power of leadership, the person of low character displays their failings in full view. The American people have no excuses regarding their present leaders – they are self-serving and display a thorough contempt for the American (slave) population who do their bidding:

“Nothing is more dangerous for man's private morality than the habit of command. The best man, the most intelligent, disinterested, generous, pure, will infallibly and always be spoiled at this trade. Two sentiments inherent in power never fail to produce this demoralisation; they are: contempt for the masses and the overestimation of one's own merits.” (Mikhail Bakunin)

If power corrupts the best of men what unimaginable horror would it rend on the simple minds of Bush and his neo-cons”? Afghanistan, Iraq (and more likely than not, Iran) bear testimony of a nation hell-bent on imposition and expansionism. The reader would note that Russia and China have not embarked on any expansionist course in recent history. The status of international rogue nation falls squarely on the invasive USA. Is this the last ‘fling’ before the inevitable fall? It would seem so; the world has tired of dictatorial regimes and megalomaniac leaders, there is no love lost when aggressive behaviour is not only pursued but also extolled.

A population may tolerate contempt for other nations in their leaders - but when a leader so clearly displays contempt for his own people then an immediate remedial action would surely be warranted. However, the incapable masses of the USA remain passive and victims in the face of an overwhelming need to act.

In view of the obvious lack of outrage, the people of America have deliberately re-classified themselves as complicit or as active participants in the Bush regime - an extremely poor choice in view of the ideals of the founding fathers of that nation. Any future retaliatory attack on the USA must be responsibly borne by the nation as a whole and should not come as a surprise or shock.

The 'spin doctors' utilised the lie of international hatred against the USA post 9/11 - they hoped to engender isolationism and fear in the local population. In this the neo-cons were supremely successful, the vast majority of the world now despises the USA; the effect on the local population is increased fear, contractionism and amenability. How easy it is!

It has been spelled out on many previous occasions by more eloquent and capable commentators than the present writer yet there is no discernible action in the face of the utter contempt displayed for the American people by their leaders. We are therefore forced to abandon the USA and cast it adrift. We would call on the American people to rally behind their leader and make it less painful for all concerned in the END.

There is no help available for those incapable of helping themselves.
