

Glowing in the Dark

The prospect of Iran developing a nuclear capability (which would realistically entail at least a five-year time frame) did not prevent John Bolton, US representative to the UN, stating that a “painful” response would be inflicted on Iran if it failed to comply with UN (American) dictates! Questions of the UN’s independence aside, is the focus on Iran a distraction from the debacle that is Iraq or is the USA following their PNAC strategy with little regard for consequences?

need a fresh coat.

The ambitions of the PNAC group (world domination by the USA) are well known. A sequence of attacks on targeted nations, Afghanistan, Iraq and Iran is part of an overall strategy to ‘secure’ Middle-East oil and dominate the region. However, the present focus on Iran, in view of the catastrophe that is Iraq would seem premature or exceedingly irresponsible if not reckless. Following a pre-planned schedule without regard to the reality 'on the ground' is a recipe for disaster.

Everyone is familiar with the stage magician’s art of distraction, a successful performance is dependent on skill in that regard, however, if an observer would not be duped it is imperative that the attention remain on the ‘main game’. I would therefore redirect your attention from where it has been directed by the mass media and ask that you recall how India and Pakistan developed nuclear capability outside the range of knowledge of western intelligence agencies.

The manic pursuit of the PNAC strategy by the present inept US administration can only end in calamity. The strategy itself is the result of pathological tendencies; world domination is a dream of madmen, Zionists, despots and others. The present US led alliance is once again leading the public in order to continue an insane program behind the scenes, it would be at very high cost if the attention were taken off the main game at this stage. It is with the introduction of wildcat elements that plans and strategies are subverted, in that regard we would introduce the reader to the reality of an undetected nuclear threat while the world’s attention is on Iran and the gambits of US leaders and so-called intelligence agencies.

The actuality is that certain nations while feigning friendship with the USA may be actively engaged in the creation of a small easily transportable nuclear device. [The number of groups willing to utilise such a device also creates the perfect camouflage.] These nations are waging a sophisticated campaign of disinformation, subterfuge, duplicity, alternative media saturation, propaganda, subversion and espionage on a scale that will inevitably bring down the new world disorder (and good riddance to that nightmare).

The best-laid plans are easily made waste by unanticipated developments and the superior strategies of an enemy. I would draw the reader's attention to an aspect of the main game, the acumen, ability or competence of the US leadership. The reader would recall the insane claims ("bouquet of flowers") of one the principal architects of PNAC, Paul Wolfowitz, and the stage managed ('three week war') victory announcement made by G.W.Bush in full flight uniform on an aircraft carrier anchored a few hundred yards offshore. It is hoped that at some stage in the near future this vessel will be renamed the 'ship of fools' as a reminder never again to allow a self-serving minority to take control of any nation!

Need I remind the US population they are being led by incompetent fools of dubious mental ability; morons and brutes know only violence as a problem solving strategy, which I stress is a disastrous 'solution' in the present situation. Would anyone entrust their pets to the care of these individuals?

Allow me to introduce you to the enemies of the Bush administration, a people faced with invasion, the murder of their families and the illegal exploitation of their resources. Most people would fight to repel such an invader. The imposition of a foreign value system, the plunder of a nation's wealth and the murder of innocent women and children fuel an already motivated fighting force! It is a matter of life or death and what must be done (in order to survive) will be done and therein lies the disruption of the 'best-laid plan' (and more).

Now dear reader is the above the ranting of a fanatic Muslim terrorist or could it possibly be the sane deliberation of a person who carried the remains of his family in his arms after an unprovoked attack on a European city? American bombs become a personal then group then organisational issue. And one does not have to look very far to find the means and resources available to those who have a common enemy.

What possesses an administration to make so many enemies in such a short period? No single nation will ever be in a position to dominate today's world. Fools, incompetents and those deluded by the mythology of invincibility chase their own psychopathology. What an utter tragedy that madmen, Zionists, megalomaniacs and incompetents have hijacked the US government.

The present world fiasco is indicative of the failure of the few making decisions for the many; power corrupts and corrupts completely. The solution to the present world crisis is simple and obvious; the majority must determine their own course. It is also known that the majority would live in peace. The people of the world are one human race with shared human characteristics - the only enemy is divisionism, beware of those forces that would divide and set the people against each other.

The days of nations, leaders, borders, etc, must come to an end. If the human race is to survive then there is only one viable option, and that is to embrace each other as One.

Peace.

[Failure to take the peaceful option would result in various nightmare scenarios similar to the psychotic game depicted above.]
