

In Anticipation of a Kiss

i do not know whether it was naivety,
honesty
or just plain anticipation (of a kiss) that i unconsciously elicited stroking your cheek
speaking in low, tender tones,

my face closer than usual.

your eyes immediately fixed on mine,
your face turned upward inviting a non-verbal response from my mouth.

an invitation that took me
completely by surprise
so quick and fresh
your reaction.

how cynical
i have become resisting
every instinct
a man,
i was born with.

i could have fallen into your eyes
and lost myself forever,
if only for an instant,
our lips
exchanged
a genuine moment of affection.

a world of
fraud, lies and perversity prevented a spontaneous reply.

i have fought too hard
too long
in this perverse world

and sustained too many wounds to readily trust even your innocent and genuine
advances.

i had almost forgotten the magnetic attraction and natural yearning of a young woman.

forgive my reticence
and lack of response.

your affectionate gesture/expression now etched forever in my memory, a reminder of too many regrets and lost moments in my life.

the fault was/is mine
all mine
so too the loss.

maybe an encounter
in the next life
should i be so fortunate,
or should my desire
prove stronger
than Fate.
