Tamarama Sunset

by ryall Tuesday, Aug 31 2010, 10:00am international / prose/poetry / literature

drawn again
to the healing coast track;
limitless sea and sky
free the heart
and relieve the mind
of heavy burdens;
my soul sets
quietly with the sun.

gently
overwhelmed
by the illusion
of liquidity in the sky,
rippling clouds
moist
as quiet tears.

O, that i would wail openly in my anguish but a Willie Wagtail interrupts in song, darting along the track from bush to bush as i walk.

i stop and fix my gaze on this energetic bird, in response it immediately ceases its melodious song!

i turn and lift my head toward the painted sky, the tiny bird bursts into song again, vocalising harmoniously with the sea, sky and fading light; heaven sent, a perfect companion -human company offers little solace for an abused and neglected heart.

i focus again on my little companion it immediately ceases singing, wagging its tail nervously from side to side.

slowly,
i turn
and lift my eyes to the sky, awe-struck by the bleeding light painting moving masterpieces;
flaming clouds contrasting brooding tones set against multiple hues of cooling blue,

the Wagtail bursts into happy song again.

a lesson perhaps --

it may be prudent not to engage directly but rather allow things to join the chorus of their own accord;

a man in profound solitude, a tiny bird a melodious song a concert of colour, sound and wonder.

people smile as they pass, the rustle of the sea a bird a man the sky singing a perfect harmony;

another Tamarama sunset.

Clannad -- Harry's Game