Black Satin

by rade Wednesday, Mar 30 2011, 11:45am international / prose/poetry / literature weary as the eternal night though sleep evades me; how is it possible to be so tired and yet remain conscious?

i tug at my sleepless bindings like Prometheus, not waiting passively for that high-pitched eagle cry before it swoops to devour my liver and entrails.

over myriad cycles
of tortuous time
i have learned its shrill language
i now return its piercing call perfectly directing it elsewhere for its sadistic meal of warm
entrails and pulsing organs.

too easily the Gods are deceived -a mortal can do much given unlimited time;
the Gods
now crowd to pay homage
and grant wishes to a mortal that outwits them.

but Gods were created to be overcome only fools and slaves bow before them in low prostrations and tremble in fear and loathing.

in this bleak biting night i am restored by the mere thought of You; my ceaseless entreaties and remonstrations, which you ignore, only feed my ardour and burning desire.

your entire being
is mine alone
though
you know it not;
you are tamed as surely
as my once wild mare
that now takes food
gladly from my hand.

you have no chance though you resist with vigour but i have landed wilder game than you, my wild and tender Love.

rest easy in your sleep tonight while i juggle the sun, moon and studded sky.

you will be glad to find home and a heart that commits to you alone. like a lost filly returning from the wild you seek the warmth and safety of boundaries and familiar spaces.

but tonight my love, i must vanquish the God of dreams for sleep is mine if i take it captive; that twisting demon that gyrating dragon it eludes me no more -- dreams of dread, bliss and white clouds beckon on this black, tarry night.

i am patient, exceedingly so my patience vanquishes impulsive enemies.

tonight the moon glows eerily through dusty memories and foggy imaginings; a mind reflected in a puddle captures a firmament, a fragile reflection disturbed by the slightest breathing/movement.

wakefulness no more the soft, warm night is mine to dream of you alone my one, true Love.

• Nights in White Satin -- Moody Blues

Cleaves Alternative News. http://cleaves.lingama.net/news/story-2421.html