

The Lack of Discipline

in the most desolate locations are the loneliest tasks undertaken and the most difficult battles fought; when loneliness aches one is forced to invoke the Godhead for comfort and conversation, to have an equal exchange, tho i am aware there are no Gods outside man's creation
- over 10,000 gods on last count.

no doubt more Deities will be created to supercede the old, failing Gods -- 'new' myths created from old themes to enslave new masses with the same dull tricks.

few fight this war,
only the elite are capable of fighting it others lack commitment, fortitude and perseverance -- discipline in a word.

as patient as time itself success is assured if the sure road to victory is followed goad and taunt the inept impatient enemy into producing immediate results for their attention deficient citizen slaves. hasty results do more to undermine the enemy than any of our attacks though we force the issue by leaving few (no) alternatives.

i learned patience in Love; targeting my heart's desire i moved slowly, surely, relentlessly, never giving up though faced with insurmountable barriers, resistance and obstructions; i persevered until success was mine, i then lost myself in the prize the (fleeting) moment i transformed into continuum, the finite into the infinite.

patience lays the foundation for discipline, an imperative for all warriors that wish to endure.

we prevail against overwhelming odds with the power that discipline bestows, the progeny of Love - is there a superior force in this universe that is able to focus existence more effectively?
