

Mongolian Eyes

by rayn Thursday, May 31 2012, 11:38am international / prose/poetry / literature i could never resist those portals to heaven and hell

ur rich aunt introduced us her desire fulfilled thru our relationship

she worked tirelessly to make that match dragging the reluctant, desperate and joining together what should never have been joined.

she had the patience and skill of ancient Chinese artisans coupled with the predatory instincts of a serpent, an acute eye for detail and balance and a rare ability to harmonise the disparate.

i remember watching her closely while she admired her porcelains and jades, appreciating what is not perceived by occidental eyes

refined, subtle --
stroking the cool,
green,
polished stone
charged and smoothed
by countless hands
over the millennia;
yet she gifted me her most treasured piece,
you,
a living work of Oriental art.

[fond of caresses
enticing,
stealing the attention of men with a repertoire of moves her aunt taught her she finally landed her prize, me.]

i was difficult prey but captured nonetheless; she always gave slack when required allowing the baited to foolishly believe it continued to enjoy its freedom; [but constantly] reeling in her line and tightening the perimeter until all resistance ceased; the prey having become familiar with captivity and learning to enjoy the certainty it offered.

it was long ago we watched the passing moments together we had no doubts that existence was made for our pleasure and enjoyment; however,
time proved that assumption incorrect we now know we created existence together at that moment our breathing synchronised and our hearts beat as One.

Cleaves Alternative News. <http://cleaves.lingama.net/news/story-3277.html>