

Hard Reality

As America continues to sink deeper and deeper into a military and economic quagmire of its own making (who needs enemies?) Most Americans continue to prefer denial to the incriminating reality of one million dead civilians (John Hopkins study) and a failed intervention in Iraq. However, reality poses no problems for winners, the competition is purring along as America, paralysed by its own fear and timidity, continues to pursue incompetent government and the consequences that pursuit entails.

There is no escaping the hard reality that skill, intelligence and savoir-faire reign supreme in ANY field of endeavour. The Sino-Russian alliance hasn't missed a beat or 'put a foot wrong' -- "humming along," is the American idiom, I believe. Today, the Sino-Russian alliance is the most powerful force on the planet, China and Russia stand ready to defend any attack from any nation or any attempt to thwart their mutually beneficial partnership. We can thank Washington Zionists and neo-cons for distracting America from its traditional role and concentrating on the Middle East to the exclusion of the rest of the World, which America has now lost to China and/or Russia! The price paid for allowing criminal and incompetent government to continue unchecked.

The world has often wondered why in the face of the most appalling political failures the American people tolerate criminals and incompetents in government. The answer is simple; the American people were led to believe they would be safe as the most powerful military force on the planet. The illusion of 'invincibility' compensated for a multitude of failures and allowed numerous other essential aspects of government and governance to rapidly deteriorate. But military supremacy is an extremely changeable and evasive thing in today's world - the partnership of China and Russia (with India soon to join, notwithstanding some minor territorial problems with China) would easily become the most powerful economic and military influence in the world. However, whether India chooses to ally itself with Russia and China is of little consequence to America -- U.S. military misadventures have left it holding a very sick baby indeed!

The situation for America is made worse as no one of any calibre or ability is running for office; the entire field is comprised of incompetent, inexperienced or malevolent and deceptive individuals.

The present course of lying, criminal invasions, plunder, murder, incurs the wrath of all nations. Surely even Americans understand that everyone hates a militaristic conqueror. Compare methodologies with the Chinese leader, Hu Jin Tao, whose diplomatic skills have acquired more in the form of resources and other needs than the entire American military machine! Civilian death tolls may be banned from coverage but few are unaware of the cost in innocent lives of foolhardy, ill-conceived, military adventures, especially when conducted by imbeciles and buffoons.

You see, Uncle, nothing has changed since the beginning of human history, the smartest always prevail against the less intellectually capable. The result of a user pays system/education is George W Bush as President; the result of a merit based system allows the most suitable to fill the position!

Hu Jin Tao rose to leadership based on many things, not least was his stunning academic achievements - the rest as they say is history, he is running rings around lesser intellectually capable leaders.

It's time to wake up, Uncle, put brains before the dollar or continue on your road to oblivion.

Peace.
