Debate is raging at the moment over the prospect of the US attacking Iran -- as if there is any doubt! Of course the US will attack Iran. People forget the Bush administration is following a plan; insane though it may be the administration has not veered from it one iota. The plan was formulated by none other than the same lunatics who formulated the PNAC doctrine; a wishful, Disneyland, 'pan-Americana' dream, which would be just another Marvel comic book plot except for the 'minor' fact of an ongoing REAL holocaust in Iraq.

Rice -- holocaust indifference

If you thought for a moment the deaths of over one million innocent civilians and four million displaced persons has twitched at the collective conscience of America and its leadership, forget it! In psychology 101 we learn that psychopaths justify all their actions no matter how grotesque or violent - it's never OUR fault, is it? And so we anticipate probably the most horrendous fiasco of this administration to date, an attack on Iran.

Unlike unsupported Iraq, Iran has allies and is supported economically and militarily by Russia, China and a host of smaller nations that do not wish to be next or to see the ENTIRE region plunged into similar circumstances to Iraq since its 'liberation.'

The criminal travesty perpetrated in Iraq may not be fully appreciated in the US; however, the remainder of the world suffers no illusions regarding American intentions and the means by which it fulfils its insane ambitions.

We also learn in psyche 101 that psychopaths rarely cease criminal activity of their own accord - external intervention is required.

It is clear the American people do not possess the 'right stuff' for the job. The task of restoring sanity to the world therefore falls to other more responsible nations. However, it is the least preferable of all the options. The irrational behaviour of the Bush regime when faced with powerful opposition is likely to trigger WWII, but the rogue must be stopped, there is no choice.
